Section 213 (2), Madras Estates Land Act I of 1908

Section 74, Burma Act II of 1905

STATEMENT OF OBJECTS AND REASONS.

The advisability of legislation in order clearly to define the position of the State in regard to irrigation was recognized as early as 1858 when the Governor in Council directed the drafting of an Act to set out "what is clearly the common law of the country, viz., that rivers and natural streams as well as springs are appropriated to Government land belong to Government." The Bill proposed in pursuance of that direction accordingly contained a declaration to this effect and further constituted "the undivided right of Government to levy a reasonable tax for the use of the water from the sources mentioned. As, however, the need for legislation did not at that time appear to be urgent, it was ordered in 1861 that the Bill should be once for all laid aside; and for many years no further action was taken.

In 1880 the subject was revived by the publication of the report of the Finance Commission, which drew specific attention to the "great inconvenience occasioned by the absence of any 'irrigation law for Madras'." As a result of the Commission thus initiated a new Bill was prepared in 1884 with the object of "establishing the law relating to irrigation and navigation works." This draft, based substantially on the Bombay Irrigation Act, 1879, was referred to a Select Committee which after seeking certain alterations suggested by a considerable majority in favour of its provisions. The measure as thus altered was, however, introduced by the Board of Revenue as amended to the conditions of the Madras Presidency, and in 1888 the Bill was, by order of Government, withdrawn.

3. The difficulties which arise from the want of a precise statement enabling the State to control and regulate irrigation in the interests of the community continued to alternate themselves upon the notice of Government, and in 1888 the Board of Revenue was requested as to the advisability of legislating. The reference requested the Board to collate the various decisions of the civil courts and to report in consultation with district officers as to the nature and extent of the legislative requests in order to define and secure the paramount authority of the State to control irrigation to the best advantage for the public good. The resolution submitted in reply dealt exhaustively with the subject, and while the complex cases involved were still under consideration, the Board's recommendation to legislate received strong confirmation from the report of the Indian Irrigation Commission, for the Commissioners in Volume II of their report—particularly paragraphs 772 to 785—warmly advocated the enactment of an irrigation law for this Presidency. The Government accepted the unanimous conclusions of these authorities as to the need for legislation and in 1908 placed an officer on special duty for the purpose of drafting an Irrigation Bill. The result of his labours was submitted to the legal secretary, and in March 1909 a draft Bill was referred to the Board of Revenue for report in consultation with selected revenue officers and representative private bodies and individuals, while the High Court and the Advocate-General were simultaneously requested to forward Government with their observations and suggestions were made to procure a general expression of the views of competent officers of the Public Works Department with regard to the measure in issue. The replies received gave rise to useful observations in the Bill and in the end of 1909 a redraft was prepared eliminating the principal defects which had elicited adverse criticism in the previous Bill. Framed mainly on the lines which legislation relating to irrigation had followed in other Presidencies of India during the preceding 10 years, the revised Bill was referred for scrutiny to the same authorities as the measure of 1908 and at the same time was laid on the "Editor's Table" with an explanatory Order (G.O. No. 3172, Revenue, dated the 19th November 1909), so as to ensure the full benefit of public criticism and suggestion. In consequence of the opinions elicited, the revised Bill, underwent further alterations both in substance and in form, and the measure ultimately assumed the shape in which it is now proposed to introduce it to the Legislative Council.

4. The history of the Bill having thus been set out, it remains to expound the main objects and reasons underlying its provisions.

In framing the Bill the Revenue Canal Act, 1895, being the latest enactment relating to irrigation, was adopted as the original model, but on final revision the provisions of the Bombay Irrigation Act, 1879, have in some cases been preferred as more suitable on the whole to the conditions prevailing in this Presidency. Certain subjects dealt with in those enactments, such for instance as "small navigable" and "labour" (vide Chapters VII and IX of the Revenue Act) have, however, been intentionally excluded as unconnected with the main objects now in view.

5. Chapter I embodies the necessary preliminary definitions. There have for the most part been taken from the Revenue Act, subject to certain modifications, as follows:—by local modifications. Mention may in particular be made of the substitution of the words "irrigation work" for the word "canal." Clause 4 makes provision for the grant of powers under the Act to the officers charged with the duty of applying it and enables the Local Government to delegate its functions in this respect.

6. Chapter II treats of the application of water and the assumption of control of works for public purposes. The opening clause (1) incorporates sections 4, 7 and 11 of the Revenue Act, and enables the Local Government by notification not only to apply the water of any river or stream or natural collection of water for the purpose of any existing or proposed irrigation or drainage work but also to assume control over any work which has not been constructed or relinquished by Government. Upon the issue of a notification under this chapter the provisions of this part according to Chapters III and IV—automatically apply; the Local Government has full powers of control and regulation subject only to the payment of compensation for substantial damage, for which provision is made in Chapter V; private interference with the water notified is prohibited; and private rights can only be acquired by grant or prescription subsequent to the date of the notification.

Chapter III relating to the control of water and of works generally, declines from the Burma Act, which merely comprises the exceptional circumstances justifying interference with the supply of water to any water-course or any person. In view of the interference noticed by the Irrigation Commission as arising from the absence of any statutory definition of the rights of Government over irrigation it has been thought possible specifically to declare what powers are possessed by Government and irrigation officers in respect to the construction of irrigation works and the control of water-supply. Classes 9 and 10 of the Bill have been drafted accordingly, an exception being made in cases where the conditions are governed by special contracts.

As against the arbitrary use of the powers declared simple protection is afforded to the owners of irrigated land in the shape of the compensation admissible in respect of substantial damage under Chapter V, but not of obstructive action on their part as provided by a later clause (46) which bars any suit or application in a civil court for the issue of an injunction to restrain the exercise of the statutory powers conferred upon Government and its officers.

Classes 11 to 15 give the requisite power of entry upon land or buildings for the purpose of survey, inspection and any other action necessary for the regulation, maintenance and management of irrigation or drainage works.

Clause 16, following section 26 of the Burma Act, provides for the recovery of the cost of repairing any damage caused to such works from the occupiers of the lands which derive benefits from that damage, if the person causing it is not identifiable; provision is further made for the infliction of a substantial penalty, not exceeding twenty times the amount of the land benefited, in order to meet cases in which the actual cost of repairs is trivial and the offender a mere tool of influential persons but the mischief done is of a large extent of irrigated land and causes material injury to crops having preferential claims to the water wrongfully diverted.

Clause 17 deals with the subject of contributions towards the repair of irrigation works which serve jointly waste and government land. In the interests of the crops affected it is essential that Government should have power to carry out necessary repairs without delay, and where the expenditure so incurred benefits an estate, the landholder is equitably liable to contribute to the cost of repair when he pays a separate rate for the water-supply which he receives.

Chapter IV treats of water-courses. Classes 18 to 25 prescribe the procedure to be followed in the construction of water-courses upon application made to an irrigation officer for such purpose, while clause 26 enables the irrigation officer of his own initiative to construct new water courses or to extend and improve those already existing. In view of the importance of adequate provision for the rapid construction of water-courses in connection with any large scheme of irrigation and in order to ensure the timely development of such schemes and the estimates of the returns in the period anticipated in the financial forecasts, the procedure prescribed for the acquisition of land in the case of private applications has been considerably simplified in the proviso to clause 25, which governs applications made by an irrigation officer and with for the purpose of new works.

Under clause 27 the cost incurred by the irrigation officer on the construction, extension and improvement of water-courses is recoverable from the owners or occupants of the land irrigated by water therefrom.

The provisions of this chapter have been taken mainly from the Burma Act, though in some cases, e.g., clauses 25, 26, 28, 30 and 31, the working of the Bombay enactment followed as being more clear. These models have been departed from however in one respect, namely, in that the water-courses after construction will remain the property of Government and possession will not be made over to the applicants. The derivation is in accordance with the prevailing practice in the Presidency, according to which irrigation channels are continually treated as State property subject to commercial or private rights of user. This method of treatment, besides simplifying the Bill, has the further advantage of avoiding occasions for dispute as to rights and liabilities which would inevitably arise if the ownership of water-courses were vested in an uncertain number of private persons with varying and often conflicting interests.

Chapter V brings together all provisions relating to the award of compensation. The general principle adopted is that compensation should be granted in respect of any substantial damage caused by the exercise of the powers conferred by the Bill, and the limitations to which that principle is subjected are set out in clause 32.

Proviso (1) to that clause follows section 10 of the Burma Act and provides that claims to compensation must ordinarily be made within one year of the date on which the damage first occurred.

Proviso (2) is taken from section 9 (f) of the same Act; but in view of the fact that clause 5 of the Bill enables the Government to assume control of artificial works as well as natural sources, it has been thought advisable to extend from five to twelve years the period within which any of water will support a claim to compensation.

The limitations enumerated under proviso (2) are, for the most part, based on section 24 of the Bombay Act and sections 5 and 39 of the Burma Act. But special mention should be made of the clause lettered (a), (b) and (c). The first of these, item (a), is intended to secure greater freedom for the alteration and improvement of new extensions of irrigation, under which the initial arrangements are to secure water heretofore and may be forced after trial to require modifications the introduction of which would be seriously hindered if the holders of land already irrigated theretofore were permitted forthwith to acquire legal rights in the continuation of the supply of water. The limitation embodied in item (b) bars claims to compensation for the withdrawal of a supply of water from land registered as "dry" in the public accounts maintained under the Madras Irrigation system, but in cases where no revenue classification exists compensation is declared admissible if irrigation has taken place regularly for a period of ten years. The limitation lettered (c) has been inserted because of the impracticability of extracting damages awarded to the detriment of all.

Clauses 33 to 36 lay down the procedure to be followed in dealing with claims to compensation, and clause 38, following the Burma model, provides the grant of compensation in the shape of a right to a supply of water from the largest work constructed.

10 Chapter VI deals with offences and penalties and tentatively follows the Bombay Act in providing heavier penalties for offences of a more serious nature.

Clauses 41 and 42 enable a Magistrate dealing with an offence under the Act to award compensation to persons injured and to take measures to make good the injury done to irrigation or drainage works.

Clause 43 confers upon irrigation officers and other selected persons powers of arrest in cases where serious offences are committed within their view.

Clause 43-A has been inserted in order to remove any doubts as to the legality of keeping enhanced water-rates in cases where water has been taken from the recognized source but by irregular means. The proviso saves any persons thus charged with enhanced water-rates from prosecution under clause 40 as well.

11 In chapter VII power is taken to make rules and to summon and examine witnesses for the purpose of any inquiry under the Bill, while, as already stated, clause 45 bars the issue of an injunction by a civil court to restrain the exercise of any of the powers conferred by the Bill upon the Government or upon any Collector or irrigation officer, and clause 47 embodies an amendment of the Madras Irrigation Cess Act, 1905, necessitated by the fact that clause 10 (1) (c) of the Bill empowers Government, notwithstanding the decree of a civil court, to change the sources of irrigation assigned to particular land. The restrictions in which the jurisdiction of the civil courts is thus subjected, while ensuring that irrigation officers shall not be hampered in the exercise of their powers for the regulation and control of irrigation works and the supply of water therefrom, will not take away from persons who may consider themselves damaged thereby the right to seek compensation by law and.

A Bill to amend the Madras Un-governmented Officers Act, 1857.

WHEREAS it is necessary to define more clearly the powers of Deputy Collectors appointed under the Madras Un-governmented Officers Act, 1857; It is hereby enacted as follows:—

1. (1) This Act may be called the Madras Deputy Collectors Act, 1914.

(2) It extends to the whole of the Presidency of Madras.

2. A Deputy Collector appointed under the Madras Ungovernmented Officers Act, 1857, may be placed by the District Collector in charge of a particular division of the district to which the Deputy Collector has been appointed.

3. The expressions "Subordinate Collector" and "Assistant Collector" in section 3 of Madras Regulation VII of 1828 shall include and be deemed always to have included a Deputy Collector appointed under the Madras Ungovernmented Officers Act, 1857.

STATEMENT OF OBJECTS AND REASONS.

Under the first sub-section of section 3 of Madras Regulation VII of 1828, a Subordinate or Assistant Collector in divisional charge has no office authority within his division to exercise all the powers conferred by law on Collectors.

Under section 3 of the Madras Ungovernmented Officers Act, 1857, a Deputy Collector in divisional charge possessed only such powers as have been assigned to him by the Collector of the district. The Government are of the view that an order of assignment merely covers powers existing in the Collector on the date of the order and does not extend to powers subsequently bestowed upon him: in other words, a fresh order of assignment is strictly speaking necessary on every occasion when additional statutory powers are conferred upon a Collector and it is desired to give a Deputy Collector in divisional charge authority to exercise such additional powers. The object of this Bill is to obviate the necessity for such orders of assignment and to place Deputy Collectors in this respect on the same footing as Subordinate and Assistant Collectors. The opportunity has been taken formally to authorize the practice of appointing Deputy Collectors to take charge of divisions.
